

Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies Presents:

Human Trafficking: What It Is, How We Each Facilitate It, and What We Can Do to Help Address it

ABOUT THE EVENT

People often assume that only legislators and law enforcement personnel can take meaningful steps to fight human trafficking, one of the most lucrative transnational crimes in the world. This presentation will challenge the validity of that belief. Dr. McCarty will provide a brief overview of human trafficking, the harm that it causes, and the ways that many of our daily purchases directly or indirectly support it. He will then identify some of the many ways that each person can help fight trafficking and assist survivors.

DR. DENNIS MCCARTY

Dennis McCarty did his undergraduate work at Georgetown University and then served for three years with the Peace Corps in rural Guatemala. He subsequently earned a Ph.D. in criminal justice from the University at Albany. Dr. McCarty spent most of his career working for New York State before retiring as an Assistant Director from what was then known as the NYS Office of Homeland Security.
